Program Note

When asked to imagine an inventor, many of us conjure images of eccentric, middle-aged men with unkempt, frazzled hair in a laboratories filled with bubbling flasks and a motley collection of debris scattered on every surface. In our imaginations, they've often created elaborate machines to do simple tasks like check the mail or make toast. And half the time, these machines run awry, causing all sorts of havoc—and yet that havoc is half of why we love these “fangled contraptions.”
